GETTING SOCIAL

Choosing to share its collections across their social media channels, Philbrook Museum of Art engages its community with themed art discussions led by curators and artists.

SHOW ME THE MONEY

Unable to sell tickets, theatre group Shakespeare's Globe launched a series of storytelling events #TellingTales delivered via Zoom for a fee of £40 per household.

ADDING VALUE

The Children's Museum of Houston created a daily virtual learning programme to help kids entertained and busy.

STAYING RELEVANT

Known for hosting cutting-edge exhibitions, Sommerset House, launched a "pay what you can" cultural programme online, I Should Be Doing Something Else Right Now, as a timely response to lockdown measures in the UK.

3

Monetise some, or all, of your collections
Put your collections behind your own branded paywall rather than relying on free services like YouTube or Google Arts and Culture.

4

Upskill your your team
Ensure your teams have the latest digital and social media savvy so they are able to create and deliver online experiences.

5

Empower your teams with remote access to your archive collections and brand assets
Use a cloud-based digital asset management solution ensure they can continue to operate remotely.
